A Suburban Community 1851 – 2018
Randwick, New South Wales

Book is now available for purchase

A small leafy suburban community of more than 90 houses, nestled between the Prince of Wales Hospital and the UNSW, has been demolished.

Acquired by the NSW Government to make way for the expansion of the adjacent Hospital, this Randwick community and their homes have disappeared.

'Remembering Eurimbla' presents the fascinating early history of this historically significant area of Randwick together with many interesting stories, anecdotes, mysteries and surprises, as well as memoirs and photographs from those who lived in this area.
